

47. She had moved in with Sue, who was living in a bright and cheery four-floor walk-up apartment with a fairly-sized living room.
48. Institutional shareholders in British land, the property company running by John Ritblat are losing patience with the company's poor share performance.
49. As she walked across the tiled floor of the reception hall, she could hear the echo of her footsteps, and it was hollow, lonely sound.
50. He fidged uncomfortably, as though unused to have visitors in his little laboratory.
51. When the central nervous system is damaged, the immune system does not function in its normal way to help heal damaging tissue.
52. At least 40 people are now feared to have died in the Mont Blanc tunnel fire, the worst ever disaster of a kind.
53. 15 leaders at last week European summit in Berlin agreed on a final compromise for the Union's budget.
54. The money was used to fund loans to applicants who were too poor to satisfy the bank's officially lend criteria.
55. Jack Kevorkian, the pro-euthanasia campaign known as Dr Death, was found guilty of second-degree murder in a Michigan court last week.
56. Noelle waited for what seemed an eternity and then the voice came back on the line and said, "Lieutenant Douglas is at weekend leave".
57. The irony that many of the cars being sold cheaply in Holland have actually been built in Britain and then exported to the Continent.